ALPACA FACT #1
ALPACA LANGUAGE IS HUMMING!
Did you know that alpacas communicate with each other by humming? While they also use heaps of body language tools such as ear, tail, and body postures, humming is their primary way of communication. By generating a sort of wordless noise with their mouth shut, alpacas can warn their herd in case of danger.

ALPACA FACT #2

ALPACAS ARE VEGGIE SUPERHEROES!

Considering that alpacas are still primarily used as pack animals in South America, it is mind-blowing to know that these fore-gut fermenters only feed on grass and other plants. This is thanks to their super-efficient digestive system! On top of that, alpacas don't need a lot of water as they derive it from the plants they consume. But the best is yet to come! Alpaca poop is known to be almost odour-free. It is a great eco-friendly fertilizer and the Inca even used to dry the 'Alpaca Gold' in the sun, burn them and then use them as fuel!

ALPACA FACT #3
A BABY ALPACA IS CALLED A "CRÍA."
It's pronounced
KREE-uh. Mama alpacas usually only have one baby at a time.
Alpaca twins are incredibly rare.
Pregnancy lasts
for about 350
days. Nearly a full year! Crias weigh 20 to 35 pounds
at birth. That's a big fur baby!
